BY JOHN NEAL:
THE WHITE-FACED PACER;
Or,
BEFORE AND AFTER THE BATTLE.

A brilliant story as thoroughly American as a pumpkin pie is ever brilliant—but it is spicy—and so is this story, with the most pungent richness of the author's peculiar, pleasant humor. There is a touch of the "Declaration" in it, too; for, under all the outside sparkle, and behind the weird and vanishing pictures of the mysterious "Pacer" and his Master, is heard the bunting of a young and noble heart, throbbing with high resolve, and is seen the vision of a Hero's face, who "regretted that he had but one life to give to his country." This most original and life-like romance of the old Revolutionary days will be doubly interesting at this period of the nation's trial, when the Heroes of today look back to the scenes for examples worthy of their fiery emulation.

The above story—one of the choicest productions of its eminent author—will be issued on TUESDAY, January 12, forming the initial number of BEADLE'S DIME LIBRARY OF CHOICE FICTION.

Good Society, in all its various phases, comes in for a complete satirization at the hands of our author. John Bradbury, Publisher, 12 Walker-st.

Success to all the outside sparkle, and behind the weird and vanishing pictures of the mysterious "Pacer" and his Master, is heard the bunting of a young and noble heart, throbbing with high resolve, and is seen the vision of a Hero's face, who "regretted that he had but one life to give to his country."
